Commercial or Residential Roofer? By Charles McGarvey

I was once asked, “What is the difference between a commercial and a residential roofer”? This question should not be confused with, “What is the difference between a commercial and a residential roofing contractor”?

Both questions may appear to be the same, but in reality, the questions and answers are very different, as there are significant skill differences between being a successful roofing contractor who is mentally running a business 24 hrs. a day, 7 days a week, 365 days a year; or a roofer working 8 to 10 hrs. a day in temperatures that commonly exceed 100 degrees in the summer to below freezing in the winter.

Whether you fall into the roofing contractor or roofer category, or have the skills to be both, everyone is part of the same industry. Additionally, in any industry made up of countless companies, and companies made up of countless individuals, success requires all groups to work together as a team.

Industry groups should help companies by supplying information on subjects relative to their industry, and companies should do the same for their employees. Without the team effort of industry organizations, companies, and employees working together, an industry, company, or individual employee can never achieve long-term success.

Remember, there is no “i” in “Team”.
